Ideas That Work

Cubes are empty and office lights out. Where has our workforce gone? Mobile! Chris Hood explains in his Move to Mobility lecture a typical employee utilizes his or her workstation an average of 35% to 40% of a normal workday.

What is more, if 30% of all workers embraced the mobile work style, we wouldn't need to build a new building for another 20 years. This is yet another compelling argument in favor of leveraging mobility given the growing focus on the question of sustainability.

With balance of work, life and family in the top two desired job profile attributes, mobility allows workers to embrace the flexibility 80% say they desire.

"...being mobile is a liberating force," explains Hood.

The bottom line is that companies can reduce their occupancy costs significantly while advancing all sorts of other improvements. But, how do you know if mobility is right for your firm?

Foresight: A Look at What's Next

Have the Jetsons finally made it to town? Take a peek at "Sky City", the tallest structure on earth and housing over 100,000 occupants, Japanese engineers feel it is the solution to today's urban crowding.

Joel's Corner

Our Workplace Community has officially been launched and this is our premier newsletter. As President of the Community, I want to thank you and CoreNet Global for joining together and providing the resources needed to launch our group and a successful event at the Atlanta Summit. For those who were unable to attend the Summit, I would like to provide a "Behind the Scenes" look at our first-ever Summit event.

Global Perspectives

Can Mobility and Organizational Chemistry Coexist?

Below are some of the opinions gathered from our recent Atlanta Summit:

- "The 'C' Suite is scared of mobility."
- "If space is empty, then there's something wrong with the space, not the people."
- "How much is just about cost?"

What has your experience been?

- "What do you think the most influential factors on Workplace will be over the next 10 years and why?"
